For jewellery brand Dehres, their mission is to elicit joy through beautiful, rare, and artistic jewellery creations. And for 2020, the Year of the Rat, the jewellery brand has launched a magnificent collection that will draw out more than just joy from the wearer – it celebrates the nuances of Chinese tradition as well.

The range, which is comprised of rings, earrings, and bracelets, goes beyond focusing on typical Chinese motifs, which one might immediately expect given its timely Chinese New Year launch. Instead, Dehres' talented designers honed in on the integration of old and new, creating a delicate balance that will appeal to wearers of various ages.

An important element this collection focuses on is the colour scheme. With green being an auspicious colour for the Year of the Rat, expect a few statement pieces that prominently feature both Colombian and Zambian emeralds. Where tradition is concerned, you will also find red and gold through the use of delicious gemstones like rubies and yellow diamonds. And as a nod to Dehres' signature colour, turquoise, select pieces are festooned with gorgeous Paraibas.

Finally, with regards to design and aesthetics, these jewellery pieces take their cue from the traditional art of Chinese paper-cutting, resulting in a delicate look that's embedded with floral accents, as well as geometrical shapes. And as mentioned earlier, the "new" comes into play through angular forms that call to mind the rising (and ever evolving) skyline of China's great cities. ☺
